College of Business Administration

President Stout presented the following report and recommendation, which he had previously prepared:

Members of the Board of Regents August 19, 1955
University of Nevada
Reno, Nevada

Gentlemen:

The changing character of business enterprise in the latter part of the 19th century and in the early part of the 20th produced a University School of Business Administration. During this period, business enterprises became larger and more complex, and specialization developed in the various functions of business management. With increased administrative responsibility, the business leader more and more developed professional and ethical attitudes, a realization of the existence of economic forces, and an acceptance of research and scientific methods in administration. More recently, the increased participation of government in the supervision and regulation of business, the susceptibility of American business to international affairs, the growing complexities of human relations, the increased competitive struggle, and the trend toward narrower profits, have been conditions which have opened opportunities to Collegiate Schools of Business to educate men for exacting managerial responsibilities and, thus, to contribute to the general welfare.

The Wharton School of Finance and Commerce, established in 1881 at the University of Pennsylvania, is historically the oldest Collegiate School of Business in the modern sense in the United States. Two schools, the University of California at Berkeley and the University of Chicago, organized Business Administration Divisions in 1898. In 1900 Dartmouth College and New York University established units. In 1908 Harvard University, Northwestern University and the University of Pittsburgh opened Schools of Business Administration. Almost without exception, the more than 100 other formally organized divisions of Business Administration in American Colleges and Universities were established after 1910.

There is an American Association of Collegiate Schools of Business, which was organized at a conference of representatives from 17 Collegiate Schools of Business on June 17, 1916. Of the 17 schools represented at this original meeting, 15 became charter members of the Association. With but one exception, all of these charter members of the Association have continued membership to the present time, and the two schools which were represented at the original conference, but did not become charter members, have since accepted membership in the Association. The purpose of the organization and the activities of the Association have been to promote and improve higher business education in the United States. Membership at present is composed of 70 institutions whose programs of instruction in business subjects have achieved the standards established by the Association. The members of the American Association of Collegiate Schools of Business are listed on addendum I.

From time to time during the past 3 years, we have informally discussed the need for the University of Nevada to reorganize the work given in the area of Business Administration and Economics so that this University can give the service and leadership to that phase of Nevada's economy that we are now doing in the areas of Agriculture, Mining, Engineering and Education. It has been our thought that the University of Nevada should do for the business people of this State what other State Universities and Land-Grant Colleges do for those engaged in business in other states.

During the past year we have carefully studied our program in Business Administration in comparison to those recognized as being outstanding. Professor Palmer and Hoyt gave leadership to a study of curricula in the field presented by 21 representative Western Colleges and Universities. Information was received also from the American Association of Collegiate Schools of Business. Research from the American Accounting Association, American Finance Association, American Marketing Association and the Society for the Advancement of Management was utilized.

A survey has been conducted by Professors Hoyt, Palmer, Dean Wood and myself, of business men from all parts of the State and from most of the major industries to determine in what areas the University should expand in order to be of greatest service to the business people. All of the business men interviewed were very cooperative and delighted to see the University of Nevada try to serve better the business interests of the State.

The information collected stresses the great need for the University of Nevada to improve its present program of Business Administration if we are going to serve our State and students well in that area. We must develop our program in the areas of Accounting, Management, Personnel, Finance, Marketing, Executive Secretarial, Taxation and Business Education. We must revise our requirements for both the regular 4-year and terminal degrees to meet the standards set by the strong Colleges of Business Administration. An improved and expanded Business Administration program is needed now and it will be needed even more in the future to meet the needs of a rapidly expanding State for professionally trained business people.

A good College of Business Administration for Nevada will be rooted in the business of this State. It should be our primary objective to prepare students for the business of Nevada. The sympathies of the faculty must always lie with Nevada business and business men.
A strong College of Business Administration should never become a comfortable place to be, because business in the State of Nevada and in the United States is dynamic and restless. Both faculty and students must constantly labor to keep up with business and to look ahead. They can rest comfortably on a conviction that they know the facts - as an astronomer knows the distance to the moon. There should always be an atmosphere of intellectual excitement, for no one will ever have a dogmatic answer to any questions. The eternal search is for greater insight into the great and complex American Business System - for better ways to teach - for better ways to learn.

The assumption that it is possible by a simple process of telling to pass on knowledge in a useful form is a very questionable one. If the learning process is to become effective in areas of Business Administration, something dynamic must take place in the learner. This truth becomes more and more apparent as the learner approaches the inevitable time when he must go into action.

The case method is the essence of teaching in good Colleges of Business Administration. There are some lectures, but few; some written reports, but very few. Since a business man who has to make a decision cannot turn to the back of a book and get the answer, good Colleges of Business Administration believe that Business students should wrestle with real problems, find their own answers; and learn - through classroom discussions - that it is wise to listen to the other fellow, that often there are many ways to solve a problem, and that sometimes there is none. The emphasis is primarily on helping students to develop mental and emotional skills in analyzing questions and reaching decisions; it is only secondarily on acquiring information.

In Nevada, case studies should be based upon Nevada situations. A case is a written report, complete and frank, of a crisis that has confronted some business firm. Every detail of the situation is presented accurately, except that the names of companies, individuals and locations are sometimes disguised. An example of a case might be the plight of a plumbing supply company which had become fouled up for a maze of complex reasons - lack of a clearly defined chain of command, poor communications, personal jealousies and a half dozen others. Classes should be conducted on a discussion basis in which the case is presented and then the students in the class analyze the company's problems, tell how they would try to solve them, explaining the reasoning behind their conclusions. Not all students will talk on any one case, and some others will use many minutes. The goal should be to concentrate on the training of judgement, to increase the thinking capacity of the student and to keep before him always the fact that Business Administration is an art - not a science.

In addition to the undergraduate program, a good College of Business Administration will offer courses for the "Middle Management Group". These are young men with some experience who have been selected by companies as potential management material. Some will come to the School at their own expense and others may be sent at company expense for a year or a two year course.

There should also be an advanced management program of a week, or month, a half semester or a semester in length. These courses will be for experienced business men who are back to pick up advanced training. Most of these men may be sent by their companies to train them for top management positions.

Faculty members of a good College of Business Administration should do more than teach their classes. They should become consultants for various business firms in order to keep their feet on the ground in practical problems. They should establish a Bureau of Business Services and Research to enable them and their students to conduct research into Nevada business so that the companies of the State may have help in moving forward. This Bureau should conduct short courses in the various communities of the State on pressing problems in those areas. The faculty and students should also publish a "Nevada Business Review" periodically during the year which will point out problems and their proposed solutions for the business man of this area.

It is to be noted that good Colleges of Business Administration assist business in the area so much that over the years various professional chairs become endowed, for example, a chair in Banking, a chair in Life Insurance, a chair in Marketing or a chair in Hotel Management.
The University of Nevada is faced with the challenge of providing a much needed improved and expanded learning environment in the field of Business Administration. Primarily it concerns organization and leadership in the area of Business Administration.

Therefore, I wish to recommend that a College of Business Administration be established at the University of Nevada, with independence equal to the other Colleges on the Campus. Such freedom is necessary to enable it to develop and improve its program to the point where it can become approved by the American Association of Collegiate Schools of Business.

Furthermore, I wish to request authorization to search for and recommend for appointment, a person to Head this College of Business Administration who will give us a dynamic and sound program of development in this area.

Respectively submitted,

Minard W. Stout
President
